

SEEDS OF SUPPORT

The Inaugural Care Farming Network Conference

Care Farms use therapeutic farming practices to promote health, well-being and belonging. Therapeutic interventions, social support, skills development, and engaging with nature benefit a diverse range of people, including those with intellectual or developmental disabilities, veterans, those suffering grief and trauma, individuals in recovery, youth, and people living with mental health challenges.

In January of 2025, the Care Farming Network will host its inaugural national conference in western Massachusetts. This exciting event aims to bring together care farmers and friends from across the country to share insights, collaborate, and advance the care farming movement.
